In the morning before leaving home the poor, struggling laundress prepares the food that the baby is to have, and cautioning diminutive Father Johnny against giving him too much water to drink or letting him get in the draught, and positively prohibiting the eating of green fruit, ahe goes to her work and poor Johnny is left alone with his charge. What this small boy has done for the past three weeks is pertectly astonishing, and how he has managed to keep the youngsters well is more than the free physicians can understand. He has however, a system of his own which I reproduce for the benefit of less successful nurses.

"Paray's all right," he said vesterday if he's let alone. He gets all be wants to eat and all the suds he wants to splash in. I don't wash him when he don't want me too. Me mother says not to eross him, and so I just carry him down in the yard and let him play there until he gets tired. Then I lug him upstairs again and he goes to sleep. Jim here, pointing to a sturdy, blue-eyed, dirty face, " is lots harder to handle, cause he's always getting lost. When he goes off I give him a besting. Well, me mother says that's the way to make him 'member that he's got to mind what's told him. Jo here is not very strong, and he stays up in the room meet the time." Poor Jo is not very strong, and it is doubtful whether he will ever be able to make the descent of the four long flights of stars without help. Both little limbs are mis-shapen and distorted and the slender ankles are scarcely equal to the support of his small body. He is a good child, of more than usual intelligence and he gives little Father Johnny most valuable assistance as a housemaid by nicking up things, keeping the flesfrom devouring the baby and watching him when the big brother is away. Every afternoon Johnny tells Jo to be good. that he " will be right back and bring him | something if he can find anything." locks him in the kitchen, and with Patsy in his arms and Jim tugging at his blouse goes downstairs, along the narrow, hot, straggling street to the wharf, and over the ferry to his mother. The trio are so well known that often they are allowed to re main on board for as many as three round trips free of charge. It is to this fresh, cool air that the superb health of the baby brothers and their father in embryo is at tributed. Saturday afternoon the laundry closed for a picnic and the hard-working, careworn mother gave Johnny a half holiday. By special arrangement we met the a new outfit, consisting of a sailor blouse. knee breeches, ribbed stockings, strong low shoes and some light underwear His attire on entering the store consisted of an old flannel blouse, long waisted enough for Sarah Bernhardt, a pair of men's pantaloons from which most of the legs had been amoutated and a man's shirt, which gave him a rotundity of hip measurement wholly out of keeping with his stature. The poor child seemed lost in the splendor of his new raiment and it was some time before we could get him to "look up." By wav of a finishing touch the shopkeeper presented him with a baseball cap, bat and ball, and in his ecstasy he forgot everything, shoes, clothes, babies and friends. Just before separating for home he was asked if there was anything else he wanted and his reply Was:

"Bananas." A dime gave him enough to make his
